Fighting for Equality

Washington, D.C., April 24, 2018)—Today the American Humanist Association (AHA) filed an amicus brief with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit in support of a lower court ruling that declared that excluding atheists and Humanists from legislative invocation practices violates both the U.S. and Florida Constitutions. Two Humanist Society Celebrants, Keith Becher and David Williamson, are plaintiffs in the case. Both are also leaders of local AHA groups in Florida.

In October, 2017, the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Florida ruled that the Brevard County Florida's Board of County Commissioners invocation policy showed favoritism for certain faiths in direct violation of the Establishment Clause. The AHA brief, endorsed by the Unitarian Universalist Association and the American Ethical Union, argues that the District Court's decision should be upheld.

"Reversal of this sound ruling would contravene decades of binding First Amendment precedent holding that the government cannot prefer some religions over others, and religion over nonreligion," said Monica Miller, Senior Counsel of the AHA's Legal Center. "Moreover, the Supreme Court has specifically declared that Humanism and atheism must be treated as 'religions' for Establishment Clause purposes."

This brief is filed on the heels of the AHA's recent legal victory in the U.S. District Court of North Carolina, which ruled that the disparate treatment of Humanist inmates violates the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment and Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

A Sigmund Freud Film Challenge.

Sunday, May 6, 2018 – 7:30 pm.

The Evolutionary Film Festival presents its first annual Sigmund Freud Film Challenge. Come see the results of indie filmmakers who were charged with making a 10-minute or less video that required these following elements: a Freudian theory or expression, the color yellow, "very interesting" as a line of dialogue, and Brown as the first or last name of any character.

Awards for participants follow the full screening of all the entries. The event was organized and promoted with the assistance of JRR Studios, the Evolutionary Project, the Tampa Bay Coalition of Reason, the Center for Inquiry Tampa Bay, the Tampa Film Society, and the local chapter of the Tampa Bay Psychoanalytic Society.

The doors open at 6:30 pm with the program to start at 7:30 pm. Tickets are $10 a person, $15 a couple. Tampa Theatre. For more information, the website is Sigmundfreudfilmchallenge.ga or contact sigmu

THE BIG ELECTION!

Yes, this is your big opportunity to offer to serve on our board of directors and help make the big decisions. At the very least you can help elect those who will.

We are bylaw mandated to have three meetings a year - more if necessary. The qualifications to serve are simple: paid member for more than a year, and be willing to serve for a term.

There will be some openings this time as some present members are leaving. But all positions are open. Up to nine members may be elected.

We live in challenging times and finding people with the dedication and courage to take them on within the context of a thoughtful civic organization is an important aspect of who we are.

We will have a brief discussion about direction and content of our mission before the election

After the election, the new board will elect temporary officers to carry on the business of the group. At the first regular meeting, permanent officers will be elected.

This month's Issue:

Gambling

A philosophical and practical discussion on this ancient habit

Our guest will be Joe Reinhardt

Taking a risk, taking a chance; it's all part of the life we lead. Everything we do has an element of the gamble to it.. Unlike animals, we humans are equipped with an imagination that allows to consider the rewards and possible negative outcomes of our actions. We also have the capacity to evaluate those risks and rewards and the likelihood of success from engaging with uncertain situations. These actions enter into everything from crossing the street to social relationships, to high stakes poker. How we handle these situations can determine our fate in many ways.

Joe Reinhardt is uniquely qualified to address these issues, both academically, and as a successful business person, and in his position as an astute observer of human behavior in stressful situations.

As Humanists it is our task to discover the secret world above and within the level of conscious recognition. Using the instruments of reason, & critical thinking, we strive to be at one in understanding both the world that made us, and the one we are inventing.

Each month a new investigation thoughtfully & critically dissects a new intersection of mind and matter. Be part of it.

At present, we are a small, intimate group meeting in a neighbor-hood library. But we are ambitious, and hope to grow. Ideally, such small discussion groups should appear in every neighborhood. The need is as great as the potential. What is required is a few longtime humanists willing to take on the relatively small effort to secure a library meeting room once a month, post a few notices here and there (including this newsletter), and show up to lead a discussion, share a little knowledge; give something to the future.

Humanism is as much in need of good followership as it is of effective leadership. Now is the time to do your part in either category. We can help.

To the Editors,

(RE: Krauss shunned by AHA...)

It appears to me that the numbers of women who have come forth more than reveals what level Krauss has stooped to in his travels. Atheists and Humanists above all should follow the high road and not stoop to Trump like behavior. When at one of our state meetings we had to list proper behavior for the men attending, I was saddened. We still find it necessary to provide a notice for our Free Flo conference. That the CFI used due process to defend Dr. K concerns me. What do we do, hold court? Women's accusations in such large numbers are not to be believed?

The Keeling Curve.

It is such a stunning example of important and clearly presented science that it has been designated as a National Historic Chemical Landmark. Its creator received the highest US award for lifetime achievement in science, the National Medal of Science, “for his pioneering and fundamental research on atmospheric and oceanic carbon dioxide, the basis for understanding global carbon cycle and global warming.”

In July 1958, Dr. Charles Keeling of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography began measuring the amount of carbon dioxide (CO<sub>2</sub>) in the Earth’s atmosphere. Using measuring equipment and techniques he developed, he collected air samples daily from an observatory 3,000 meters above sea level, on the remote north side of the Mauna Loa volcano on Hawaii’s Big Island.

He continued doing this until his death in 2005, and his son Ralph, also a climate scientist at Scripps, has continued it since. The result is the world’s longest continuous record of atmospheric carbon dioxide. A recent release is shown below.

In his very first annual report, Keeling noted that the level at the end of the first year was higher than it had been 12 months earlier. That proved to be a permanent trend. The amount of CO<sub>2</sub> in the air we breathe has risen from 313 parts per million to 421 — a 33% increase. Keeling’s work disproved the once common view that oceans and other sinks would prevent CO<sub>2</sub> from fossil fuels from accumulating in the atmosphere.

Carbon dioxide is transparent to the part of the electromagnetic spectrum we experience as visible light, but opaque to the part we feel as heat.

As in a greenhouse, sunlight gets in and warms things up, but the heat can’t get out. The more CO<sub>2</sub> there is in the atmosphere, the warmer our climate will be.

A 33% increase in 60 years is a serious concern, but it’s much worse than it looks. In the 1990s, scientists drilled deep holes in Antarctic’s ancient ice — the cores they removed provide an 800,000 year record of atmospheric CO<sub>2</sub> levels. Through all that time, through ice ages and warm spells, the CO<sub>2</sub> level was never higher than 300 parts per million. Greenhouse gas concentrations were already above that when Keeling started work, and they are still going up.

But there is something else of note in the Keeling Curve. Before the steady upward trend was clear, Keeling noticed something unexpected — CO<sub>2</sub> levels rise from October to May and fall from May to October, creating a saw-tooth pattern, shown in red. He was the first person to see the Earth breathing.

What is Secular Rescue?

The Campaign for Free Expression is an initiative of the Center for Inquiry (CFI) to focus the public's attention and efforts on one of the most basic and foundational human rights: the freedom to express yourself. We hope you join us.

Around the world, militant extremists have harassed, attacked, and murdered secularists and dissidents for daring to promote and defend secular government and fundamental human rights. In some countries, including most recently Bangladesh, this problem is particularly severe, and new threats emerge across the globe every day.

Secular Rescue is a program of the Center for Inquiry designed to provide emergency assistance to writers, bloggers, publishers, and activists who face threats due to their beliefs or expressions regarding religion.

Generous public support has allowed the Center for Inquiry to assist more than two dozen individuals and their families in escaping to safety, either temporarily or permanently.

ABOUT THE COMMON GOOD

From the best-selling author of Saving Capitalism and The Work of Nations, a passionate, clear-eyed manifesto on why we must restore the idea of the common good to the center of our economics and politics.

With the warmth and lucidity that have made him one of our most important public voices, Robert B. Reich makes the case for a generous, inclusive understanding of the American project, centering on the moral obligations of citizenship. Rooting his argument in everyday reality and common sense, Reich demonstrates the existence of a common good, and argues that it is this that defines a society or a nation. Societies and nations undergo virtuous cycles that reinforce and build the common good, as well as vicious cycles that undermine it. Over the course of the past five decades, Reich contends, America has been in a slowly accelerating vicious cycle—one that can and must be reversed. But first we need to weigh what really matters, and how we as a country should relate to honor, shame, patriotism, truth, and the meaning of leadership.

Powerful, urgent, and utterly vital, this is a heartfelt missive from one of our foremost political thinkers: a fundamental statement about the purpose of society and a cri de coeur to save America's soul.

“The important role of union organizations must be admitted: their object is the representation of the various categories of workers, their lawful collaboration in the economic advance of society, and the development of the sense of their responsibility for the realization of the common good.” ~ Pope Paul VI

“More and more, when faced with the world of men, the only reaction is one of individualism. Man alone is an end unto himself. Everything one tries to do for the common good ends in failure.” ~ Albert Camus

CHURCH AND STATE

Religious Apostasy Knows No Limits

The message to energize Christian conservatives has twin purposes:
to inspire them to celebrate their victories and to stoke enough grievance to prod them to vote. But in a midterm election, no singular political enemy will emerge the way Hillary Clinton did in 2016. Instead, leaders of the movement plan to lean hard into a message that fans fears and grudges: that the progressive movement and national media mock Christian life and threaten everything religious conservatives have achieved in the 15 months of the Trump administration.

Faster than light? Well, not so fast!

By Terry A. Smiljanich (reprinted from TBS Report)

In September, physicists at an Italian laboratory reported that they had measured subatomic particles traveling faster than the speed of light. If true, this would violate one of the seemingly unshakable principles in modern physics, first formulated by Einstein, that nothing can travel faster than the speed of light. This universal speed limit has been the bane of science-fiction writers ever since. How can we travel to distant stars if it would take years or centuries for one round trip?

The scientists at the Gran Sasso National Laboratory in Italy performed measurements over the course of three years, timing the speed of neutrinos coming from the CERN facility in Geneva, Switzerland, 730 kilometers away. Traveling at the speed of light, it should have taken 2.43 milliseconds to make the trip, but on average the neutrinos got there 60 nanoseconds sooner than expected. (A nanosecond is one billionth of a second.)

Scientists around the world were befuddled. How can this be? Will we have to rewrite the basic laws of physics? Woo-woo artists everywhere started speculating that know-it-all scientists were getting a comeuppance, and that proof of psychic phenomena will soon follow. Or could this be another "cold fusion" fiasco, a new earth-shattering discovery soon to be discredited?

As it turns out, neither appears to be the case. There is an important lesson to be learned in watching this exciting report unfold. This is science at its best, not its most ridiculous.

Notice, first of all, how the discovery was reported. The scientists didn't call a press conference announcing that Einstein had been proven wrong and that a new world of physics had begun. The scientists instead reported their findings at a conference of peers at CERN, and set forth the specific ways in which the experiments had been performed, their attempts to triple-check the results, and the uncertainty they felt existed in their measurements. Rather than making room on their mantles for a Nobel Prize, they instead invited their fellow scientists to duplicate the experiments and find its flaws.

Also notice the reaction of the scientific community when presented with a clear description of how the experiments were performed. They immediately began exploring ways in which the findings might be wrong.

When the media tells us "here is great hope for a cure", why is it usually useless information?

Ways to validate "news" and sources for a reality check:

Skeptical Raptor
Double X Science

Perhaps a systematic error in the experiment gave rise to the anomalous results. Perhaps there was uncertainty in the "cloud of neutrinos" that were under observation. Perhaps an electronic malfunction of some sort occurred. No one threw out their physics books.

Since the initial report, the same laboratory asked CERN to "tighten" the cloud of neutrinos being generated and sent to Italy, in order to further refine the parameters of the experiment. In mid-November, they reported that even with this change in the stream of neutrinos, they measured the same 60-nanosecond-faster-than-light speed. This eliminates one possible source of error. But another group of scientists, pointing out that if the neutrinos had indeed traveled faster than light they would have lost a predictable amount of energy, looked for such loss in energy and found none.

Scientists will continue -- as they should -- looking for additional evidence contrary to the "faster-than-light" hypothesis and trying to figure out what (if anything) is wrong with the original experimental design. If they cannot find such systemic errors, then they will need to begin speculating about the ways in which the theory of special relativity may require revision. Some have even argued that special relativity could allow for such a phenomenon under very limited circumstances. Whatever happens, true scientific findings are falsifiable, and scientific theories are always open to disproof and change. Compare that to a typical psychic claim.

As Carl Sagan said, and we often repeat, "Extraordinary claims require extraordinary proof."

The "Grotesque Caricature" of the White Evangelical is real

By Egberto Willies, Friday April 20, 2018

Most are apoplectic about the White Evangelical durable and cultlike support for Donald Trump. Some see their current morality as a self-serving new thing to get the judges they want. The evil emanating from their movement is neither new nor should it be surprising.

Hollis Phelps', Professor of Interdisciplinary studies at Mercer University in Macon, GA wrote an article titled "Maybe It's Time to Admit that the 'Grotesque Caricature' of White Evangelicals is the Reality" where he examines the pathology. It is likely the best analysis of the reality of the evil that has always been a part of the sect. He wrote the following.

There's no doubt that evangelicalism seems to have an image problem, especially since its overwhelming alliance with Trump. In the minds of many outside the fold, evangelicalism no longer represents a specific religious position centered on sin and the need for individual salvation but rather a self-serving, power-hungry political movement that will side with the devil himself for the sake of political pragmatism.

"When people say what does it mean to be an evangelical, people don't say evangelism or the gospel," Birdsall told the Washington Post. But this image problem isn't new. Although polling shows that overall feelings toward evangelicals as a religious group have remained relatively stable since 2014, the perception of evangelicals as "agents of intolerance," to quote John McCain back in 2008, well predates the Trump era. And besides, we shouldn't chalk it all up to image. The fact remains that over 80% of self-identified white evangelical voters cast their lot with Trump. Moreover, despite a host of missteps and scandals, overall evangelical support for Trump as president hasn't declined but grown.

Phelps posits the pretext that the White Evangelical uses to support Donald Trump and turns it on its head.

Given the consistency with which white evangelicals as a whole have lent their support to Trump—and right-wing candidates and policies more generally—it's far past time to own up to the fact that the image is, in many respects, the reality.

Well-intentioned evangelical leaders may not like to hear that, but it remains the case that an overwhelming majority of evangelicals continue to support Trump and his policies. Sure, they may have issues with his moral center, or lack thereof, but they're willing to overlook all this for the sake of political expediency, for promises of "religious freedom," and the hope of a judiciary stacked with conservative judges. This is because, at the end of the day, evangelicalism isn't really about personal values but, rather, social and political conversion and control.

Phelps reveals an inconvenient truth about the White Evangelical. Trump did not create the pathology. He is just their medium that is a reflection of them.

The Trump era, then, does not create a new problem for evangelicals and their image; it's simply casting a very bright light on what has always been there, at least for the past forty years or so. ... it's questionable the extent to which evangelicals ever held much moral authority in the first place. ... appealing to some "pure" form of the faith beyond its supposed political corruption—beyond the racism, xenophobia, nationalism, and the like that even critics of paper over—isn't the way to go.

Not only do such appeals represent little more than nostalgia-laden theological desires that have little to do with what goes on on the ground, but they also ignore the fact that the line between religion and politics is flimsy at best, if not entirely non-existent.

Evangelicalism, in its current manifestation, isn't a religion that has been corrupted by its entry into politics but is, rather, a social movement that works through a specific type of politics. The substance of that politics has been clearly on display for some time now. Trump and his evangelical allies didn't invent it; they only exacerbated it.

It is important that your Evangelical relatives and friends read this. It just may give them pause as they examine their morality. Maybe they will begin to see what the rest of the world sees. Maybe they will realize the irreparable damage they are doing to Christianity.

The Florida Constitution Revision Commission (CRC) voted to pass a proposal that would undermine public education in Florida and open the floodgates to unregulated charter schools supported by taxpayer dollars. Instead of being answerable to local school boards, the proposal would allow other authorities to create and manage charter schools in Florida communities without local accountability.

Throughout the country, the ACLU has seen expansive charter school programs that lack public accountability lead to discriminatory enrollment policies, exacerbation of racial discrepancies in education funding, and taxpayer-funded religious education.

The CRC proposal, formerly Proposal 71, has now been misleadingly grouped with other, less controversial education language in a way that would mislead voters into not knowing they were voting on a proposal that had anything to do with charter schools.

If adopted, this provision would enable for-profit charter companies to siphon off dollars intended for public schools with no accountability, undermining Florida students' right to a high-quality public education. Because the proposal also limits local school boards' ability to manage charter schools, it also limits the public's ability to vet and monitor charter schools to ensure they comply with the same standards and non-discrimination policies as all other public schools.

We need your help to stop this proposal from advancing. Contact the CRC now and urge them to reject this dangerous proposal. Thank you for standing with us in defense of Florida students.

In late April, the Supreme Court began hearing arguments in Trump v. Hawaii – the first time it will fully assess the Muslim ban. SCOTUS now has the chance to, once and for all, put an end to President Trump's attempt to violate our religious freedoms and the basic principles of our immigration laws.

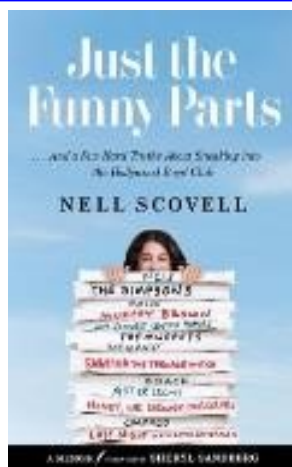

We know it's been a long, complicated legal fight since the first Muslim ban was announced over a year ago, but let's be clear: Each version of the ban has been found unconstitutional, illegal, or both by federal trial and appellate courts.

Today, as the Supreme Court convenes to hear arguments against the third version of Trump's Muslim ban, it's critical to highlight the human toll of Trump's hateful executive order. Visit our Living with the Muslim Ban collection to read the stories of Rashad, Haya, and so many others whose lives have been uprooted by the ban.

This juicy and insightful memoir blows the doors off the male dominated writers' room and offers a scathingly funny account of Hollywood's sexual politics over the last 30 years. After David Letterman publicly confessed that he'd had "sex with staffers," former Late Night Nell Scovell felt compelled to speak out. Her revelations about gender discrimination in late night TV ignited a serious, sometimes contentious cultural debate about diversity in the workplace.

The Keeling Curve

The saw-tooth pattern reflects vegetation cycles in the northern hemisphere: CO<sub>2</sub> is taken out of the atmosphere by living plants during the April-September growing season, and released by dead plants in the rest of the year. The pattern is slightly offset by the opposite seasons in the southern hemisphere, but since the majority of the world's land, and the great majority of agricultural land, is in the north, the saw-tooth cycle is not over-ridden. This pattern has probably been unchanged as long as the continents have been in their present locations.

The saw-tooth pattern reveals an important example of the complex interworking of biological, chemical and geological cycles that define global metabolism. The planet's orbit and tilt cause seasons, which trigger cycles of plant growth and decay, which cause atmospheric CO<sub>2</sub> to rise and fall. While each of those cycles can be studied independently, they can only be fully understood as elements of the Earth as an integrated system.

Since 1958 the amplitude of the zigzag — the distance from high to low each year — has increased by as much as 50%. More CO<sub>2</sub> is being absorbed by forests and plants in spring and summer, and more is being released in fall and winter, but the change isn't balanced — the highs are increasing faster than the lows. Plants seem to be struggling to take in as much as possible. Other studies indicate that increased CO<sub>2</sub> intake helps plants such as corn to grow faster, but reduces the crop's nutritional value.

What the Keeling Curve shows, then, are two separate but connected rifts in Earth's metabolism. First, an increase in total CO<sub>2</sub> that breaks with at least 800,000 years of history. Second, increased CO<sub>2</sub> is changing the way that plants absorb and emit CO<sub>2</sub>, and that in turn is altering a seasonal cycle that has likely been unchanged for hundreds of millions of years.

In short, the Keeling Curve shows that Earth isn't just breathing, it is hyperventilating. No one knows what the long-term results might be.

New Books and New Delhi

I am going to New Delhi. I have been asked to participate in a happy workplace conclave to discuss humanistic business management and how to use science to stop bullying in the workplace. While I am there, I have also been asked to speak to 450 teachers at the Shri Ram School - to talk to them about how to use behavioral science to stop bullying behavior. I am very excited about this.

The other good news is that I am making progress on getting my online programs converted into streaming video, dvds, books, audio books and ebooks.

The latest is Reality Based Decision Making for Effective Strategy Development: <http://amzn.to/2ED0Pfd>

Also available in multiple formats is Socratic Jujitsu: How to Win Arguments Without Arguing: <http://amzn.to/2sH3orc>

And Why Bullies Bully & How to Stop Them Using Science: <http://amzn.to/2FgldyE>

Of course, all of these courses and more are available at: <https://humanistlearning.com/programsoffered/>

Finally - my new course - How to De-Escalate Conflicts Using Behavioral Science is available for registration: <https://humanistlearning.com/de-escalate-conflicts/> Please note that I will be out of town until March 1st, so there may be a delay in getting you registered onto this course. It is also only pre-approved by SHRM as I am waiting on HRCI approval. But a general certificate of completion is available.

Thanks and take care.

We are pleased to offer legal assistance with church state separation issues as an important focus. For many people, atheism represents the most focused & powerful criticism of the philosophical world-view with which most of us were raised. It is liberating for the same reason it attracts the enmity of those who are committed to the closed & changeless narrative of unexamined traditional beliefs. JP

In God We Trust ?

Atheists of Florida continues contacting Florida School boards concerning our offer to supply the signs needed to meet the mandate the legislature passed that all schools display the state motto, In God We Trust., in every building used by the school board. We are offering to supply, at our expense, signs which meet the requirement, but also teach students about the first amendment and the diversity of gods (religions) in the United States. (The signs are pictured above and are also available at Free2Think.org) We have directly contacted 65 of the 67 county school boards to inform them of our offer. We attended the Pinellas County School Board meeting in April (the presentation is available for viewing at <https://youtu.be/SDOVXSQZ7Y4>) and will attend the Sarasota County School Board meeting in May.

To assist us with the project we ran a (not very scientific) survey asking what god(s), if any, people trust. While the survey doesn't officially close until April 30th, the results are pretty clear. We have, at the time of publication, received 431 responses. 45.9% of the responses say they trust no god. The Fly Spaghetti Monster received 35.7% of the vote, with Jesus receiving 14.6% and Thor getting 11.8%. We listed 23 gods (some with multiple names) and gave people a chance to add their own god, so we ended up with 56 gods. A few of the gods added were the Invisible Pink Unicorn, All when my period is late, and the extraterrestrial Spaghetti goddess.

Humanist Families of Greater Tampa

Jennifer Hancock started this organization several years ago. It uniquely serves Humanist families with a variety of wonderful programs throughout the year. There is a strong emphasis on creative childrearing. Here, you can make connection with other families dealing with the problems of living in a society that is still hostile to an explicitly Humanist Way of life. Jennifer is author of several books including: The Humanist Handbook, The Humanist Approach to Happiness, & her latest book, The Bully Vaccine.

Humanist Families organizes social outings every month. These are opportunities to do something fun, socialize & enjoy each other's company. Sometimes we go to a park, sometimes a museum, sometimes we go swimming. Our group has grown over the past year to the point we now organize Tampa area outings & Manatee/Sarasota area outings every month.

Throughout the year we host parties like Darwin Day in February, World Humanist Day in June, Freethought Day at Disney in October & Carl Sagan Day in November. Among our spin off groups, is a Parenting Beyond Belief group which gets together to discuss the challenges of raising children without religion. We are on Facebook.

The Humanist Way By Norm R. Allen Jr.

Progressive Christians should not be reluctant to give humanism a try. Many Black Christians in particular seem blissfully unaware of the damage that organized religion has done to the African continent. Was all of the pain, misery, oppression, enslavement and death really worth it? Conversely, organized humanists have traveled the world without oppressing, enslaving and killing people. We have disrupted no cultures and smashed no idols. We come in peace and go in peace. The bottom line is that progressive Christians should at least do more to challenge the reactionary teachings of the Bible. If they cannot transform their reactionary churches from within, they need to find new, progressive churches, as many have done. After all, the world would be a much better place if all religious individuals and institutions were truly and consistently progressive.

Thinking Freely Speaking Out

By Jim Haight, United CoR

Even after the Bill of Rights was law, some states continued to outlaw criticism of religion. In 1879, a Maryland law asserted:

"If any person, by writing or speaking, shall blaspheme or curse God, or shall write or utter any profane words of and concerning our Savior, Jesus Christ, or of and concerning the Trinity... shall be imprisoned not more than six months."

A famous American case involved P.T. Barnum before he became a circus tycoon. As a teen-ager, he started a weekly Connecticut newspaper, The Herald of Freedom, which denounced Calvinist "blue laws" against Sabbath work. His attack on church elders caused a libel prosecution that put him in jail for two months. Upon release, the budding showman staged a welcome-home parade for himself.

England's laws required all officeholders to swear a religious oath "on the true faith of a Christian." Freethinker Charles Bradlaugh, president of the Secular Society and publisher of a skeptic newspaper, was elected to Parliament in 1880, but refused to swear the oath. He was jailed briefly and expelled from the House of Commons, then won subsequent re-elections, and finally was seated in 1886. Previously, he and secular colleagues fought various blasphemy charges.

Today, many Western democracies are scuttling blasphemy laws – but Muslim lands still enforce them brutally.

The clash between free speech and blasphemy prosecution cannot be resolved. It ends only when religion fades so much that too few believers remain to be outraged by questioning. Witty British writer and Catholic apologist G.K. Chesterton wrote in 1905:

"Blasphemy depends on belief and is fading with it. If anyone doubts this, let him sit down seriously and try to think blasphemous thoughts about Thor.
